In the paper, an AMERICAN university creates the current Coronavirus by combining SARS with the Bat coronavirus and observes that it can bind to the ACE2 receptor in a rat engineered to have human lung cells.

What is your point? That the virus has been engineered?
The sequence of the covid-19 has been posted hundred of time.
It clearly show it come form natural and random mutation... and absolutely not from a targeted engineering.

Please, in your next response, enter the name of ONE technique which would allow such an engineering of covid-19.
A tip: the article you cited used endonuclease, exchanging one part of the viral genome with another part of a genome. It is pretty obvious in phylogenetic analysis. So, it has clearly not been used for covid-19.

Checked. I guess there's no hard proof, but it very much seems like it since it was in Wuhan the virus first appeared and infected lots of people, and there's where they have a BSL4 lab and a scientist from Wuhan worked at the NC lab... so I mean it certainly seems like they either fucked up or released it on purpose.*

They didn't necessarily steal it, since they participated in the research/development in NC, so they knew how to re-create the virus. Maybe they just paid to take some samples with them back to Wuhan.

>there's literally a book from 1981 outlining this would happen and then there's the "Anglosaxon mission" which clearly shows premeditation.

I'm well aware of that. Also look at this Madonna video: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=VG3WkiL0d_U <-- it's full of bizarre "Revelation of the method" / "predictive programming" messages.

* (if it was on purpose, and intended as an attack against the West, then they must have known lots of chinks would die -- maybe they, the CCP, thought China could survive it in the long run by implementing hardcore Mao-style martial law, while counting on Western governments not doing that and being unable to handle it politically.)

huh? It was a collaboration between UNC and the Institute of Virology in Wuhan. The funding was also primarily from the CCP. This was a Chinese group using American knowledge to produce a novel coronavirus for themselves. Now what could China want with a novel coronavirus with human-to-human transmission, hmmmmmm.....

Lol, China provides the raw materials, provides the funding, takes the samples back to their own BSL4 lab to continue the collaboration. And you say:
>Watch the shills try to turn this into proof that China made this bioweapon. This is clearly showing the opposite.
Oh and obviously you don't know how authorship works on academic papers. By being the second to last author, ZL Shi was the co-PI working with the UNC group directly on this project. This was a joint collaboration and the resulting virus leaked from the Wuhan institute of virology. China paid for and had this virus made. China released it, accident, or intentionally we will never know (unhappy suicidal grad students are a thing). China covered it up, thus ensuring the spread across the world. This is the literal definition of a biological attack.

Want to know something very telling about this whole thing? The genome of the virus they made is not in genbank. I think it's highly possible that the virus is NEITHER simply an attack against China or simply an attack against the West by the CCP. But rather an attack against the whole planet.

It seems very likely that it's something the Elitistfags have been planning for decades, to aid in their goal of global population reduction and implementation of a one-world government, and normalizing martial-law conditions and forced vaccinations etc. Allowing China to acquire the virus was simply the mechanism they used to released it on the world, because they knew the virus would leak out from the lab there.

fear mongering bullshit, taken out of context. What these rapports don't take into account are all the unreported cases of Covid infections, for the symptoms are very similar to the normal flue. Studies released in the netherlands indicate a mortality rate of just 0.5% when set off against the number of unreported cases during a normal flue epidemic.

The only difference between a normal flue strain and the corona strain is that it transfers more easily between people. But that's about it. The rest is just fear mongering bullshit. Plain and simple.

Likely that as more credible experts looked at it and found nothing sinister, or supporting evidence to the initial claim by, again, 1 paper. This also had HIV stitched into it that caused immuno-suppression giving it a 3 week incubation then shut off and caused instant death, remember? Now we know for a fact that it's a 3-7 day incubation on average, and the HIV chimera nonsense was bogus. More eyes looking at something means a better understanding.

>No,you elaborate what make you 100% its natural?
You can do phylogenetic analysis: so basically, you look at the RNA sequence from the virus and you compare it to known viruses. With that, you can build a genetic tree.

What you can see is that the covid-19 has a very close cousin among bat coronavirus (96% similarity with RaTG13)(so, covid-19 probably evolve from there). The difference is due to mutation distributed "randomly" among the sequence. This is typical for a natural evolution.

With gene editing techniques, you can efficiently modify some part of a genome. You can induce a mutation, removed a part of a sequence or insert a part of a sequence. But you have to start from an existing genome (we can synthesize RNA strands up to 100 nucleotide efficiently, but not more).
The problem with the engineered theory is that you should apply the gene editing technique several hundred time to obtain the covid-19 sequence, starting from its closest cousin. This is impossible in practice... you will simply end up with no desired product but only with side products.

This is purely technical limitation.
The second problem is that, you cannot predict and design the impact of so many mutations.

Does t it answer your question?

I don't know for sure. I did not look into the protocol.
But I bet it is done by utlra-filtration. Basically, is a technique is to separate macro-molecule depending on their size. So you can basically select particle from the size of the virus (then protein denaturation, RNA extraction, copying into DNA, amplification and sequencing)

I could be wrong but I know that CRISPR uses weaponized molds and shit to splice DNA and RNA sequencing. I've mostly read up about it being used to cure diseases but, I'm guessing it could also be used to manufacture one. Better question. Suppose this is all a grand conspiracy, who wins from this scenario?
China's economy: fucked.
US's economy: being fucked, about to be hard fucked.
You don't just dump a bioweapon in an enemy's country and not immediately seal your own. then do fuck all to contain it once it's back home. You also don't dump a bioweapon that fucks your entire country's GDP. As for accidental release, it's a BSL-4 lab. The two "strains" differs only by 2 nucleotides. The covid-19 sequence is 30000 nucleotides. So, it is not a big difference and absolutely not surprising for a RNA virus.

The fact that one strain is more "agressive" is not correct. The authors of the article admitted it was not the correct word to use (because for the moment, we simply don't know the difference of "aggressiveness" between the strains).
